EDITOR'S PREFACE

M R. THOMAS placed at my disposal for use in the preparation of this volume his entire collection of concert and festival programmes from the year 1855,—when, in coöperation with Mr. William Mason, the pianist, he inaugurated the Mason-Thomas chamber concerts in New York,—until the year 1905, which has witnessed the close of the fourteenth season of the Chicago Orchestra, and its first season as an endowed, permanent organization in its own hall.

These programmes, such was the industry and devotion of their maker, number nearly ten thousand. It would have been manifestly inconvenient to present the entire set in one volume, and besides, it would have involved considerable repetition, as many of the programmes for tours in the spring and summer are the same as those performed in the larger cities in autumn and winter, and several others are programmes of public rehearsals preceding the regular weekly concerts.

Fourteen of the programme groups, representing some of the most important concerts, are presented complete; in other cases, those have been selected which help to preserve the value of the whole for historical reference. In making a choice I have also sought to demonstrate by comparison the progress of popular education in the higher music, as well as the steady elevation of the popular taste and enjoyment of the best music of all kinds. In editing these programmes I have followed the lingual and orthographical text of the originals, making no changes except in the case of obvious typographical errors.

It adds special value as well as authority to this volume that Mr. Thomas consented to introduce the programmes with an exposition of his system of programme-making. His universally acknowledged skill in this direction, as well as his concise and illuminating reference to the two "pillars"—Beethoven and Wagner—and the important purpose they have subserved in the general plan of structure, invest this part of his introduction with extraordinary interest. Mr. Thomas's dislike to encores is also well known from long experience and many stoutly contested struggles with over-enthusiastic and importunate audiences. He furnishes an explanation of his opposition to this prevalent and sometimes pernicious habit which should be satisfactory to any reasonable concert-goer. He also makes some timely suggestions to the habitual late-comers, and closes his introduction with an extremely interesting short essay upon the modern orchestra technique, which should attract general attention in the musical world.

This extraordinary array of programmes stands for what Mr. Thomas accomplished in popular musical education by untiring industry, masterly skill, and a single-minded devotion to his art, which was never disturbed by ill fortune or influenced by commercialism. How he accomplished this, what obstacles he overcame, what battles he fought with prejudice and ignorance, how steadily and persistently he strove to reach his high ideal, is shown in the first volume of this work. This volume is filled with the evidences of accomplishment, which makes history, and with the memories of success, which are the most satisfactory awards of fame.

INTRODUCTION

THE following pages have been written in response to a request for an account of the method I use in arranging my programmes.

In earlier years they always included a Beethoven number; first, because Beethoven is the nearest to us in spirit; second, because he expresses more than any other composer; and Programme-Making third, because he has reached the highest pinnacle in instrumental music, which became through him a language. Thus Beethoven answers a double purpose; he gives delight to the educated, and teaches the uneducated. His place was always in the first part of the programme.

I have always believed in climaxes, also in giving people the most recent musical productions, and Wagner is the composer who satisfies both these essentials. Like Beethoven, he also answers a double purpose. He represents the modern spirit, and his effective scoring makes the desired climax. Wagner excites his hearers, especially the younger generation, and interests the less musical.

In this way Beethoven and Wagner became the pillars, so to speak, of my programmes. The effect of these composers on the public was plainly apparent. So I placed them where they belonged, and then filled out the rest of the programme so as to keep within a certain limit of time, have each piece prepare for the one to follow, observe a steady crescendo, never allow an anticlimax, and “keep a trump” for the last. I knew exactly the character of the pieces I needed for filling up and completing the programme after I had selected my so-called pillars, and began to hunt for them, but often I failed to find them: As I could not compose them, I finally had to give up the search in such cases, and change my sketch.

The real trouble, however, was the one-sidedness of the public taste, which made it difficult in this scheme to meet the popular demand to any considerable extent and still preserve the unity of the programme. Two numbers served this purpose well for many years—the “Träumerei” by Schumann, and the “Blue Danube Waltz” by Johann Strauss. While I was in Europe, in the spring of 1867, Mr. George Matzka had arranged the “Träumerei” for small orchestra at the request of some of the friends and patrons of the Summer Night Concerts at Terrace Garden, New York. He added as a trio the well-known Romanza. For the following winter season I rearranged the “Träumerei” for strings only, without the double basses, retained the trio, and then repeated the “Träumerei,” but this time with muted strings, making an effective diminuendo at the end, finishing with a piano, pianissimo, pianississimo, à la Ole Bull. This was altogether a new effect. The tone colors created sufficient sensation to prove an attraction, but we remained in our places after having reached the softest point of "pianississimo," while Ole Bull, in his performance of the "Arkansas Traveller," would move slowly backward on the stage as he played softer and softer, and finally only continue the movement of his bow, without touching the strings, leaving the listener to the illusions of his imagination. About this time I brought over with me from Vienna, where I had enjoyed hearing them as given by the composers, "The Blue Danube Waltz" and many other dances, by the brothers Johann and Joseph Strauss, and the playing of these never failed to make a popular sensation in the concert-room.

The greatest difficulty I have found in arranging programmes, until very recent times, has been to interest the audience in other masters besides Beethoven and Wagner, and thereby enlarge the repertoire of the public and broaden its conceptions. I have never wished to pose as an educator or a philanthropist, except in so far as I might help the public to get beyond certain so-called "popular music" — which represents nothing more than sweet sentimentalism and rhythm, on the level of the dime novel. Nor has it been a fad of mine, as some people have imagined, to persevere for half a century and insist upon preserving the unity of a programme. If anything, it has been a fixed principle, and the determination to be associated with something worthy and to represent something to which a man need not be ashamed of devoting his life, which have actuated me. The practical question of "bread and butter" for the orchestra player also entered into the problem. If the only aim of a musician were to amuse the people, the sublimest of all the arts would soon be lost to humanity.

And here I think it is apropos to speak of the encore habit. While judicious applause is stimulating, and an occasional repetition of a short piece is excusable, the constant demand for the repetition of numbers, or parts of them, must be characterized as greedy and in bad taste. It is still worse to interpolate something else.

The Encore Habit The effect of a repetition is never so good as that of the first performance. In the case of master works it creates an anticlimax. Ordinary respect for the composers should restrain any one from assisting in a demonstration to force such an encore. A master-mind in music, as in any other sphere of creation, closely calculates the effect he wishes to make. If he did not succeed in making it, he would not be a master. Therefore, to prolong a composition by repetition defeats its creator's purpose, as it produces a different effect from that which he intended. There are practical reasons against encores, also. They place the last numbers on the programme at a disadvantage, prolong it to an unreasonable length, and tire the listener. In a programme consisting principally of marches and dances, it makes little difference whether encores are given or not, since, with the exception that one may be more brilliantly scored than another, the aim and character of all the pieces are similar. But a programme consisting of works representing varied emotions is arranged with proper regard to the relationship between the numbers. Consequently, such a programme must be made with a view to the exclusion of encores.

Again, the public are not of one mind. To what pleases one, another may be utterly indifferent; but each wishes his own favorite repeated, and thinks that he is entitled to it. Consequently, as a matter of mutual justice, when one begins to applaud, the rest assist. It is tantamount to saying, "I have had my piece repeated; it is but fair you should have yours." The inevitable effect is to give any programme a miscellaneous character.

Lastly, it certainly is not the actual time an encore takes to which executants object, for every player is willing to give this, but the modern composer has no consideration for the executant in obtaining his effects, and some pieces are so fatiguing that an immediate effective repetition is impossible. Sometimes, also, it is unadvisable as well as overburdening, in view of the rest of the programme, which may also be fatiguing.

The foregoing pages present a sketch of the general plan on which I have always made my programmes. In arranging a symphony programme to-day, we do not any longer need the outward attractions which formed my so-called "pillars" in earlier times. The symphony audience is now beyond that.

Its horizon has broadened, and it recognizes the necessity of the lesser lights in the solar system of music, in order to measure the value of the greater. The craving for excitement of the nerves has given place to intellectual enjoyment, and a programme arranged from works by Bach and Mozart and ending with Beethoven is enjoyed as much as, at times, a combination of Wagner, Tschaikowsky, and Strauss. The symphony chosen — either by rotation or advisability — decides the character of the programme. The time allowed for the performance, and the selection of works in keeping with that symphony, do the rest.

I admit, at the outset, that this is a delicate subject for discussion, so before we go any further let us A Word to Habitual Late-Comers understand the point in question. Some people have not learned to think about art matters, and probably never will, while others are “born late.” It will be difficult to convince the average amusement seeker, who shows no consideration for his neighbor because he is a stranger, that he has no right to come to a theatre or concert when he pleases because he has paid for his ticket.

But, can a greater injustice be perpetrated on others who perhaps have made considerable sacrifice to be punctual, and have prepared themselves to enter into the spirit of the music to be performed, than suddenly and rudely to be aroused from a musical exaltation, in which they are oblivious of their surroundings, by persons who oblige them to rise and let them squeeze by to their seats, and who perhaps even talk, after they are seated, about something not at all in harmony with the music or the occasion? Why, everybody understands that it is not only rude to be late to a dinner party, but that the seating of the late-comer creates such a disturbance of the atmosphere that it is difficult to establish unity of feeling again for that evening. How much more fatal is it to the unity of a concert!

Even though the late-comers to a concert wait until there is a pause, the disturbance is almost the same. If a symphony opens the programme, the movements are related to each other. In a programme without a symphony the pieces are selected with a view to the effect which each has upon its next neighbor, and this effect is nullified by any disturbance in the audience. The proportion of late-comers, as a rule, is so small that a thinking person should feel embarrassed to belong to that class. A person who is accidentally delayed ought to wait until the intermission before taking his seat, or, in any event, if a symphony is being played, until it is finished.

We do not all enjoy the same things, nor even the same music, with equal intensity; but the music-lover is more absorbed by his music than by anything else, and is more sensitive to disturbance. I never open a programme with a Beethoven symphony if I can help it, simply on account of late-comers, although this often leads to undue length in the programme. The late-comers not only disturb the audience, but the executants also become irritated. How, then, can they do justice to the task before them, or be in the proper mood for it, when their minds are not concentrated upon their work? This, of course, also affects the conductor, and mostly in his interpretation. The late-comers who own boxes can easily avoid disturbing others by refraining from talking. I must be excused from giving an opinion on this species of disturbance, for my gift of emphatic language is not adequate to the subject.

If I have given my opinion freely on these matters it is because the public sin in this way from thoughtlessness rather than from intention, and generally without realizing the injustice of which they are guilty. I have also been encouraged by the following incident to believe that the majority of people would be more considerate in this matter if their attention were called to the importance of it. Some years ago I gave a "Historical Beethoven Programme," and it had to begin with the Eroica Symphony. I was not willing to have the whole effect of the symphony marred and perhaps ruined by late-comers taking their seats between its movements, so I made a public appeal in advance in a notice explaining the situation, requesting patrons to be on time, and stating that the doors would not be opened to admit late-comers until the symphony was finished. We had no difficulty, and the audience were promptly in their seats. The few late-comers who had not seen the preliminary notice were satisfied after an explanation by our tactful manager, and waited at the rear until the symphony was ended.

There is no class of men in the world which suffers so much from fatigue as our American business men.

Some Practical Effects of Music The fatigue alluded to is that caused by applying certain faculties for an undue length of time to any one thing. Nor is there anywhere a class as much in need of a healthful and elevating recreation that will necessitate the use of other faculties, and by stimulating the latter rest the former, and thus create a healthy harmony in the system. To listen to music is restful to the human being, because faculties are called into action and appealed to other than those he ordinarily uses, and also because it absorbs all his attention and frees him from his worldly cares. Instrumental music is especially restful, because it appeals to his imagination and intellect, and permits his own interpretation to the extent of his experience, whereas in vocal music the interpretation is bound by the text. I speak now of master works, and not of sentimental rhythmical trifles. A prominent physician—not musically inclined—one evening attended one of my concerts. During the intermission he came to see me. "What are you doing here?" I asked, and he replied that he had a very serious and difficult case and had not been to bed for two nights, and his mind was distracted over it. "I came here," he added, "to listen to your music, and I thank you for it. I feel better, and rested, and now I see my case clearly." Let the medical men try this. I could give many similar instances of editors, lawyers, and other men whose business was of an annoying and taxing nature, who have told me that, although they were not musical in the strict sense of the term, they found rest and relaxation in listening to our orchestral concerts. One reason why I came to Chicago was because I understood the excitement and nervous strain that every one, more or less, suffered from who lived there, and realized the consequent need of establishing a permanent musical institution in such a community.

Since Wagner's works have been given on the operatic stage in America, I have left off from my The Modern concert programmes many of the excerpts Orchestra from them which I formerly played; in Technique fact, as many as the public would allow. The necessity for calling attention to his works no longer exists, nor does he suffer from being neglected, and besides, much of his music is not suitable or legitimate for concert purposes.

Wagner always aims at a climax, and at times uses means which are too realistic for the concert stage but perfectly legitimate for the operatic stage, for which they were intended. He often employs the same methods as the impressionist painters. Their pictures are effective only at a certain distance. In like manner Wagner's music is effective only at a certain distance, and only under certain conditions. While the brain is engaged with the dramatic action, the eye can take in scenery, color, etc., and still not hinder the ear from taking in the tone-flood prepared by the composer and justified by the situation, so as to saturate the whole human system. All may be in keeping with the dramatic action, and yet be at the expense of music and without soul. The difference between the music of the concert-room and that of the operatic stage is not sufficiently understood and observed to-day.

When Wagner's music was first introduced, many a conductor ruined it, and himself as its interpreter, by taking the tempo as the technique would indicate, allowing time for rapid passages and expression marks, as should be done in concert music. Wagner, however, does not depend upon individual efforts, but rather upon combinations and massing, rapid passages for the strings, for instance, which a single player cannot perform. A number of violins, say sixteen first and sixteen second, which is the number Wagner demands for his scores, will make an effect in which everything is distinct. The intervals which one man drops another will play, as no two players will drop the same interval, and so the general effect is satisfactory. This, taken as a principle, may answer for an opera orchestra, but it would never do for a concert orchestra. Deterioration would be the speedy result.

And yet the Wagner technique has something very fascinating about it, and one learns the music readily by heart. There is something spontaneous and melodious about its figures,—symmetrical, I might say,—and the fingers seem to run without effort if one has the passage in his head. I remember, in 1872, when I engaged Mr. Lockwood, who was London's best harpist and a very able player and conscientious man, he had never seen the music of "Tristan," or anything from "the Ring," and he nearly went crazy over it the first few weeks. But he set to work and practised it so industriously that he soon mastered the music, and it became easy to him. I suppose it had impressed itself upon his memory. I may relate another instance. One day in the early seventies I received "Wotan's Farewell," and the "Magic Fire" scene, from the "Walküre" (in manuscript), from Europe, while we were travelling. We had but a short journey to make in the morning before reaching the next place, so I called a rehearsal for the strings in the afternoon, and began at once with the Fire motive, asking the first stand to play alone. The two concertmeisters, well known virtuosos, began, but found the music very difficult. After working on it for about an hour and a half with the first stands of the first and second violins, I realized that it was getting late, so I exclaimed, "You see what is before you, and you had better study this privately before we have another rehearsal. But let us all try it together once, and hear how it sounds." Meanwhile, of course, the other stands had read the music while the first and second violins were playing, and were to some extent familiar with it. We tried it together, and it sounded so well, and the figures were so distinct, that we all left the hall in very merry mood, and from that day to this I have never rehearsed those string parts again.

I had the same experience with the "Ride of the Valkyries." The score and parts arrived one morning during a rehearsal. The package was brought to me, and I explained to the orchestra what it contained. We were all eager to try it, so I had the parts put on the stands. We started, but it was not long before the first violins stopped, so I gave a sign, and the rest of the orchestra came to a stop also. The concertmeister then said, "Mr. Thomas, it is impossible to play this music in that tempo." Now, he knew perfectly well that I was also a violinist, and he knew what was possible and what was not, but he did not know what I was after, and that I cared more for the spirit of the music than the technique. So I said, "Try it; it sounds all right. I shall take the same tempo, and you can play as many notes of each passage as you can. Begin a passage in time, and end in time." We started again, and the result was the same as with the "Magic Fire Scene."

An interesting incident occurred somewhat later, when Rubinstein and Wieniawski were both concertizing with us. One evening we had the "Ride of the Valkyries" on our programme. At the end of the first part, after we had all left the stage, a sudden tumult arose. I listened and heard voices saying, "You can't play it, either," and "Let's hear you play it," etc. Looking for what it all meant, I saw some of the players addressing Wieniawski. Meanwhile some one had gone for the music and placed it on a table in the centre of the large room. Wieniawski went to the table and began to play, the whole orchestra standing around him. The scene was so comical, and such a noise was kept up, that I do not remember whether he succeeded in playing it or not. I am inclined to believe he did not, but that makes little difference, for Wieniawski was one of the greatest violinists of all ages.

I think these incidents sufficiently illustrate what I mean by saying that this kind of technique is not legitimate for the concert-hall, where accurate execution, tone quality, and expression are the first requisites, and are of more importance than descriptive music.

Descriptive music was written by Bach, and it was attempted long before him even, but it is safe to say that it was not successful until Beethoven wrote his Pastoral Symphony. The expansions and innovations of Berlioz, Liszt, and Wagner, were the natural evolutions of their time. Beethoven was not understood by Berlioz, and possibly the greatest influence Beethoven had over him was in his use of nuances, sfs, ppp, etc. Berlioz recognized and adopted the outward innovation which Beethoven achieved in his "Eroica" by expression marks, contrast, and passion, but the soul or spirit expressing the deepest humanity he hardly understood. He expanded his score, and tried to replace soul by adopting a text which should interest the listener and to cover up the lack of musical expression with material effects. This is the much-debated programme music. Beethoven's music in the Pastoral Symphony is easily understood by everyone, but that of Berlioz, even with an underlying text, is not. In other words, his music and text do not harmonize, though his works were interesting for a time.

Liszt, with his great heart and human impulses, must have been a skilful interpreter of Beethoven on the piano, but hardly with the orchestra. His own orchestral scores show too plainly that he never entered into the secrets of that world. He also looked for new paths, for the same reasons as Berlioz, and succeeded in making valuable suggestions, but he was never able to reach the heights to which he so ambitiously aspired.

Wagner understood Beethoven principally from the intellectual side, and adopted and expanded everything, but also without soul. His text and music, however, blended. He made a great impression on the world by his combination of intellect and passion, or sensuousness. He touched greatness in "Siegfried's Death March," but even in this chiefly by his intellect. Wagner did not care for humanity, but in his later life he became sentimental, as is shown in his "Parsifal"—though the Flower Maiden scene shows that he remained sensuous to the last.

Liszt and Wagner both suffered much in the nineteenth century from lack of appreciation, in consequence of the small size of halls and theatres at that time. Their expanded scores were too noisy for the halls and theatres of their day, nor could the balance of the strings with the other choirs be observed. All this has greatly changed. The spirit of expansion soon prevailed generally, and larger auditoriums were built. I myself visited three new large modern opera houses—those of Paris, Vienna, and Leipsic—in one year (1867). Orchestras have been enlarged and larger concert-halls built, until at last the reverse conditions prevail. The modern music is heard to advantage, but in the meantime in these large places Mozart and Beethoven have ceased to be effective.

Wagner and his followers have nearly doubled the size of the string choir of the orchestra, as well as of the wood wind, and even the brass, partly for color and partly to obtain the independence of each choir, as well as volume for the large modern halls. While the classic writers knew only the primary colors, the moderns generally use all the mixtures of the palette, and although by this means they gain in color and volume, they sacrifice individuality, which is the expression of the soul.

The Ninth Symphony, for instance, I have decided not to give again in the immense halls in which I have had to play of late years in Chicago, New York, and Cincinnati. It is an injustice both to the work and the audience. The impression made by this work, and the excitement caused at the first Festival in Cincinnati, where we gave it in a wooden hall of moderate size, called the Sängerfest Halle, we have never been able to repeat in the new hall of larger dimensions. When I speak of a large hall, I mean large in the European sense of the term. Our monster American halls and theatres are fit only for mass meetings and horse shows. Orchestral music of every school is ineffective in them.

Wagner calls his trilogy, “Der Ring der Nibelungen,” a “Bühnenfestspiel.¹” He intended that it should be given only on exceptional occasions and under certain conditions and moods. He ought to have understood the aggressive spirit of the nineteenth century (which is often misnamed progress) better. When a young composer to-day writes an accompaniment to a song or lullaby, he will try to use the same force as that of the Festspiel orchestra, to show that he also has the ability. We must now always have the “biggest”—and not only that, but “one more,” and enlarge upon the past, whether it shows progress or not. Many things thus take on a different aspect; but change is not necessarily progress.

No doubt orchestra technique was advanced by Wagner; but the demands of Richard Strauss upon the orchestra are much greater, even, than those of Wagner, and he consciously writes practical impossibilities. In fact, he revels and delights in doing so. Now, the question is this: Should the composer not observe a certain standard and average technique for the orchestra, compatible with progress and practice, as in other relations of life—self-control and good manners, so to speak? A burning question remains, which every sincere musician ought to observe,—purity of style.

Our art is old enough now to warrant the representation of every period, as far as possible under its own conditions, by using the same instruments as those for which the composer conceived his work. We are in need of a music museum, so to speak, and I believe it will be organized some day, perhaps in connection with a great national school, in which the various periods will be adequately represented, in halls of different sizes, and with orchestras selected for the purpose. Beginnings have already been made in this direction in Munich, for instance, which has a suitable building for Wagner's music-dramas, and also a small building for the operas of Mozart. For the last few years I have given works of Bach which allow massing — both instrumental and choral — with an orchestra, which not only balanced the chorus, but in which, also, the same proportion between the wood-wind and string choirs was observed as in the orchestra for which he wrote. By thus massing all the choirs, I used the method of the modern orchestra palette for the three so-called trumpet parts, and by a discreet rewriting of these parts for four D cornets for the first and second, and two trumpets in A for the third, and duplicating these with four D and two A clarinets — according to compass — I obtained a characteristic color of the trumpet parts, and at the same time made them powerful enough to blend with sixteen first violins, twelve flutes, twelve oboes, etc. This combination also enabled the players to give the original ornamentations of the composer, which one might call to-day a secret language, and which were fully written out in all the parts. The effect of Bach's music played by an orchestra thus proportioned is entirely different from that which is produced when played by the orchestra ordinarily used in modern times.

II

MR. THOMAS'S FIRST ORCHESTRAL CONCERT

1862

[The programme which follows is the first given by an orchestra under Mr. Thomas's direction. It is notable, not only as marking the beginning of his career as an orchestral conductor, but as showing, even at that early period, his skill as a programme-maker, both in his high standard and in his introduction of important novelties, and the appearance of distinguished soloists. It is also interesting from the fact that Mr. Thomas in this concert employed the harp and the English horn in an orchestra for the first time in this country. The concert took place at Irving Hall, New York, May 13, 1862.—EDR.]

May 13, 1862. THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY CONCERTS

[The New York Symphony concerts, at first designated "soirees," were given during the period from 1864 to 1878. The break in the programmes during 1870 and 1871 is explained by Mr. Thomas's residence in Cincinnati during those two years. These concerts, sixty-two in number, mark the beginning of his efforts to organize a permanent orchestra. The work was continued in the long seasons of summer garden concerts which began in 1865. The symphony concerts are noteworthy for the high standard at which he aimed, and the strenuous competition which he maintained with the long-established Philharmonic Society—a competition which ultimately led to his election as director of the latter, and which almost immeasurably advanced the interests of the higher music in New York City.—EDR.]

VI

THE NEW YORK GARDEN CONCERTS
[1865-1891]

[The summer night concerts which Mr. Thomas gave in New York City for more than twenty-five years are conspicuous events in his career as a conductor. It was by their aid that he kept his orchestra in continuous service, and thus was enabled to bring it to that high standard of excellence which speedily gave both it and its director a national reputation. When not engaged in the Garden or the Symphony concerts, he was enabled to make tours and present programmes in the performance of which his players, by long practice, had reached extraordinary skill and finish. During this quarter of a century he gave concerts all over the United States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, which firmly fixed the fame of the Thomas Orchestra.

The New York Garden concerts may be divided into six groups, as follows:

1. Belvedere Lion Park, January 4, 1865, to September 20, 1865, 32 concerts.
2. Terrace Garden, June 11, 1866, to September 15, 1867, two seasons, 187 concerts.
3. Central Park Garden, May 25, 1868, to September 16, 1875, eight seasons, 1,127 concerts.
4. Gilmore Garden, May 25, 1878, to September 28, 1878, 131 concerts.
5. Lenox Lyceum Summer Night, May 30, 1890, to April 19, 1891, 51 concerts.
6. Madison Square Garden, July 6, 1891, to August 16, 1891, 42 concerts.

The programmes which follow have been selected for the purpose of showing the educational influence of these garden concerts upon the popular taste, and the success which attended Mr. Thomas's efforts in that direction.—EDR.]

THE CINCINNATI FESTIVALS

[1873-1904]

[The sixteen biennial festivals held at Cincinnati between 1873 and 1904 mark the highest achievements of Mr. Thomas in programme making, as well as in programme performance. They have made Cincinnati famous as a musical centre, but, more important than this, they have almost immeasurably advanced the musical progress of the West by stimulating the growth of choral societies, arousing healthy competition, and influencing the musical culture of the whole country. The instrumental nucleus of these festivals is his own orchestra, and the chorus singers have been trained by experienced and skilful chorus masters under his supervision. Thus, from every point of view the performances have been well-nigh ideal. The material of the programmes has been of the highest character, and yet subordinated to the popular appreciation. The artists employed have always been the best attainable. The result has been continuous, steady, healthy musical growth. What that growth means may be understood by comparing the programme of the first festival, in 1873, the principal numbers of which were the "Dettingen Te Deum" of Handel, selections from Gluck's "Orpheus," the "Choral Symphony" of Beethoven, the "Gipsy Life" of Schumann, "Walpurgis Night" of Mendelssohn, and Schubert's Symphony in C, with the colossal programme of 1904, which contained such great works as Bach's Suite No. 2, in B minor and Mass in B minor, Elgar's Oratorio, "The Dream of Gerontius," Beethoven's Mass in D major and Ninth Symphony, Mozart's Symphony in E flat, Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, Berlioz's "Hymn," op. 26, Bruckner's Unfinished Symphony No. 9, in D minor, Brahms's Rhapsody, op. 53, and two of Richard Strauss's tone poems, "Till Eulenspiegel" and "Tod und Verklärung," and after making the comparison, to remember that the colossal programme of 1904 was received with an enthusiasm as great as that which greeted the much less exacting one of 1873. CHICAGO SUMMER NIGHT CONCERTS

[1877-1890]

[The summer night concerts given by Mr. Thomas at the Exposition Building in Chicago during a period of thirteen years were the most important and significant of all his popular concerts, because of the high qualities of standard music performed as well as of the new music of contemporary composers heard for the first time in this country. They derive an added interest from the fact that their success was one of the prominent considerations which led Mr. Thomas to the final decision to make Chicago his home. There were three hundred and sixty-nine of these concerts. In making a selection from the list of programmes, the "composers," "ball room," "historical," and "request" have been preferred, and are given in full. Regular "request" programmes as a concert feature were made by Mr. Thomas for the first time in the first season (1877) of these concerts. They are significant as showing the progress of musical education and the changes in popular taste.—EDR.]

[The educational influence of Mr. Thomas's work is clearly apparent in these "request programmes." It comes out in still stronger light when the "request programmes" of the Chicago Orchestra seasons are compared with them. These were few in number, and at last were discontinued because it became unnecessary for Mr. Thomas to ask Chicago audiences what they requested. He knew what they wished, and they accepted what he gave. Consequently the Chicago programmes ceased to be problematical or experimental. The following representative "request programmes" during the Chicago Orchestra seasons tell the story of growth.—EDR.]

THE NEW YORK FESTIVAL

[The New York Festival of 1882 was an outgrowth of the Cincinnati Festivals, five of which at that time had been given with steadily increasing success. Two festivals were given in Chicago, in 1882 and 1884, the programmes of which will be found among the regular Chicago programmes, and there were a few elsewhere in 1882, but the scheme was not carried out, owing to changes in Mr. Thomas's plans and other circumstances. CHICAGO ORCHESTRA CONCERTS
[1891-1905]

[Mr. Thomas organized the Chicago Orchestra in 1891, and this year, 1905, it will complete its fourteenth season. The success of this orchestra is the crowning event in his long career. In spite of continuous deficits, each year growing smaller, however, and in the face of many serious obstacles, he made such an appeal to the public, and secured such a firm hold upon its esteem and confidence, that when the trustees announced that they could no longer carry the burden of deficits and that the orchestra must be disbanded if the public was not willing to come forward and save it, the people, rich and poor, promptly responded to the call, raised three-quarters of a million dollars for a new hall, and made the orchestra self-supporting and permanent. The story of this unprecedented popular movement is told in detail in the first volume. The programmes of these fourteen years are the ripened products of Mr. Thomas's skill and experience as a programme-maker. They include the highest achievements of classical and modern composition, and form a complete musical education system.—EDR.]

[Mr. Frederick Stock, assistant conductor of the orchestra, was leader at the ninth concert, Mr. Thomas having been stricken with the illness which resulted fatally, January 4, 1905. The tenth concert was postponed on this account, and memorial concerts were given January 6 at Orchestra Hall and January 8 at the Auditorium, with the following programme for each concert.—EDR.]

Memorial Concerts, January 6 and 8, 1905. Chorale, Bach; Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" (first two movements) Beethoven; "Siegfried's Death March," from "Die Götterdämmerung," Wagner; Tone poem, "Death and Transfiguration," Strauss.

[Concerts were resumed the week ending January 13, when the eleventh programme was performed, Mr. Stock conducting. It was necessary again to postpone the tenth concert, owing to the difficulty of arranging dates for M. de Pachmann, the pianist, who was to have been the soloist, but in order to preserve the sequence of Mr. Thomas's programmes, the tenth is inserted in its regular order, as Mr. Thomas prepared it.—EDR.]

Tenth Concert, January 6, 1905. Symphony No. 4, F minor, op. 36, Tschaikowsky; Concerto for pianoforte, No. 2, F minor, op. 21, Chopin (M. Vladimir de Pachmann); Scherzo, "L'Apprenti Sorcier," Dukas; Tone Poem, "Death and Transfiguration," op. 24, Strauss.

[At the eleventh concert, the "Marche Funèbre," from Beethoven's Sonata, op. 26, arranged for orchestra by Mr. Thomas, was played as a tribute to the memory of Charles D. Hamill, who died January 11, 1905. Mr. Hamill had been a friend of Mr. Thomas for more than forty years, and was one of his staunchest supporters in all his musical undertakings. He was also one of the incorporators of the Orchestral Association, served as a trustee since its organization in 1890, and at the time of his death was Chairman of the Executive Committee. He was largely instrumental in inducing Mr. Thomas to leave New York and make Chicago his home. He combined musical knowledge with business ability, and thus became a valued counsellor and judicious supporter of Mr. Thomas in his efforts to advance the interests of the higher music. As one of the founders of the orchestra, as well as of the Art Institute, Chicago owes Mr. Hamill a debt of gratitude for his resolute and successful labors in the service of the highest and most beautiful of the arts.—EDR.]

[Mr. Thomas left no programme for the fourteenth concert. The programme for the fifteenth is the last complete one written by him, as that for the sixteenth is only a sketch which he intended to fill out later. The fifteenth is as follows.—EDR.]

Fifteenth Concert, February 10. Symphony in D (Köchel, 504), Mozart; Concerto No. 5, E flat, op. 73, Beethoven (Eugen D'Albert); Symphonic variations, op. 78, Dvorak; Overture, "In the South," ("Alassio") op. 50, Elgar.

XXX

THE CHICAGO STRING QUARTETTE
[1896-1897]

[In 1896 Mr. Thomas organized a string quartette, composed of players in his orchestra, and inaugurated a series of chamber concerts. The musical public, however, were too much engaged with the regular orchestral concerts to give the undertaking proper support, and the concerts were discontinued in the Spring of 1897. The programmes were as follows.—EDR.]

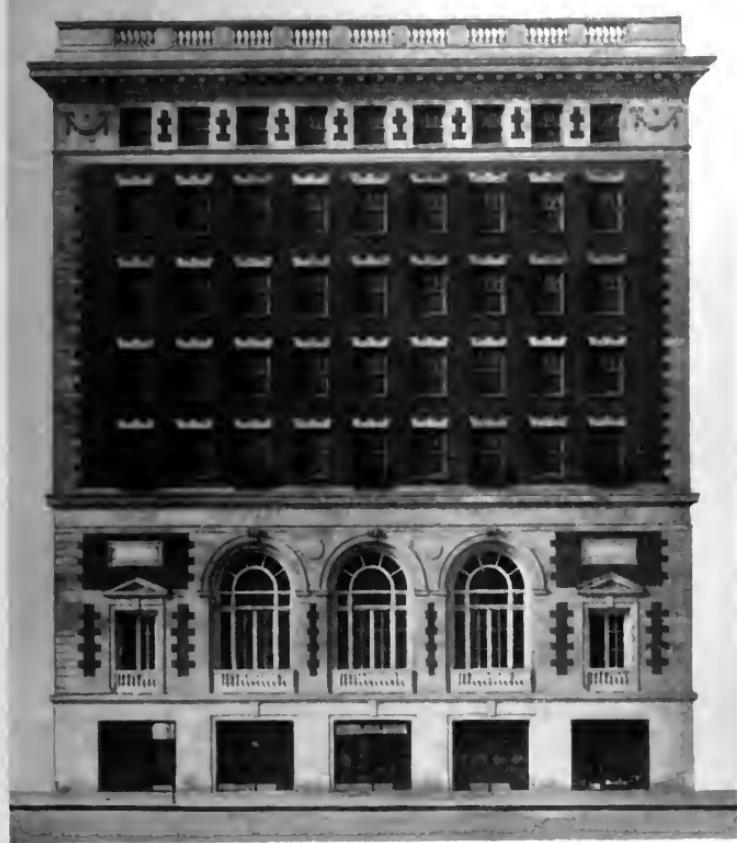

First Concert, December 22, 1896. Quartet, No. 4, op. 18, in C minor, Beethoven; Quintet, op. 44, in E flat, Schumann; Sextet, op. 18, in B flat, Brahms.

[With the fifteenth programme of the fourteenth season of the Chicago Orchestra Concerts, in Orchestra Hall, the long list closes. It includes more than ten thousand programmes made by Mr. Thomas during the last fifty years. It is an eloquent testimonial to the extraordinary activity and strenuous nature of his life-work, as well as to his matchless skill in programme-making. The record should be of the greatest value to musicians in general and to conductors and those aspiring to become conductors in particular, and is of supreme significance as a compendium of the musical history of the United States, and as an index of popular musical progress during the last half century. Mr. Thomas has fully explained in the Introduction to this volume his system of programme-making, and, it may be added, that a programme once made by him remained unchanged, unless alteration was demanded by the failure of soloists to appear. There was no occasion to change orchestral numbers, for, until he was prostrated by his last illness, he was never absent from or late at a concert or rehearsal during a period of more than fifty years.—EDR.]

WORKS INTRODUCED INTO THIS COUNTRY BY MR. THOMAS

[The following record of works rendered by Mr. Thomas for the first time in this country, showing locality and date of performance, has been prepared with scrupulous care, Mr. Thomas himself, Mr. Frederick Stock, assistant conductor of the Chicago Orchestra, Mr. Theodore McNicol, its librarian, and the editor of this work having coöperated in its compilation. It may be relied upon as correct, and therefore cannot but prove of important historical value to the musical student, while at the same time it will interest the general musical public as a proof of his wide research, catholic taste, and artistic enterprise.—EDR.]
